Elizabeth began painting when she was three years old. Her mother was an artist, so she was always exposed to the arts. Her first attempt at a mural was in high school when her teacher Mary Jo Williams got permission to put a mural on the walls of the recreation room. All of the art classes were able to help draw and paint the murals. This is what started Elizabeth thinking about a career in art.

During her career, she has been able to paint on all types of surfaces. Her works have included a sports theme mural on a parking lot retaining wall by a sports center (212 ft. X 20 ft. High) and a transportation theme mural on a wall near a rail station. These are both located in Buffalo, New York. She has also painted various stage sets and backdrops, many of which are for the Walnut Valley Festival.
